

Linux patent lawsuit: follow the money

By srlinuxx

Created 13/10/2007 - 12:47pm

Submitted by srlinuxx on Saturday 13th of October 2007 12:47:11 PM Filed under Legal [1]

Mark Radcliffe hints at something that I hope isn't true: that open source's growth might make it a prime candidate for patent trolls. This is one of the primary things that has bothered me about the IP Innovation lawsuit against Red Hat and Novell, two Linux desktop companies:

There is no Linux desktop market, and comparatively little in the bank accounts of both companies. Why sue penny pinchers when you can instead sue the sugar daddy?

But why sue two companies with nonexistent desktop businesses when Microsoft provides the biggest potential jackpot of all? (After all, this same company sued and settled with Apple earlier this year.) Unless, of course, it is Microsoft funding the whole thing?

More Here [2]

Also interesting by Matt:

Backcountry.com has been using open source for years. Last week, it finally gave something back.

An open-source web moocher comes clean [3]

Legal

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/20975>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/106>

[2] http://blogs.cnet.com/8301-13505_1-9796916-16.html

[3] http://blogs.cnet.com/8301-13505_1-9796915-16.html?part=rss&tag=feed&subj=TheOpenRoad