a flash of light, I see a wing I think it's a bird, but he doesn't sing in his mouth an engagement ring lines of truth and lies blurring another flash I think I see drips of blood, he cackles at me flaps of wings all over the tree crashing waves come up from the sea thunder explodes they all take flight no one can see the carnage at night my eyes adjust but not enough light I can't see my life try as I might lightning bolt, shredded white dress this must be a nightmare me in bareness I think of lost love as memories regress sudden loud noise my heart oppress sharp pain I feel across my face more blood and tears all over the place I fall to the floor crumpled in disgrace in the wind black feathers and lace fast as I run I can not escape the beast gains intending to rape focus my eyes it begins to reshape silhouette of man, my chest agape

Next I see my heart on the floor Silhouette turns, rain starts to downpour You think it'd be him, but it's me to abhor My blood drains off towards the shore the greatest gift my love he forsake leaving my heart with nothing but ache darkness and loss and confusion make this nightmare of pain I can not awake
