

Impressions ? HaikuOS R1 Alpha 2

By srlinuxx

Created 16/06/2010 - 5:37pm

Submitted by srlinuxx on Wednesday 16th of June 2010 05:37:04 PM Filed under OS [1]

HaikuOS has been in development for so long though that the R2 Alpha1 release is fairly stable and represents a major milestone. Let's see what I discovered?

First Impressions

HaikuOS is? different. Installation is a bit more involved for the user than with other operating systems. You set up Haiku partitions a bit differently than with Linux or BSD, and once that is done you can install Haiku.

The desktop, while nicely minimalistic, is a bit devoid of any noticeable features. No panels (taskbars) or anything. The top-right corner features a little notification area that features a clock and tracker, that keeps track of open windows and programs. It does not lend itself to a very user-friendly desktop experience though.

More here [2]

OS

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/45900>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/37>

[2] <http://g33q.co.za/2010/06/16/impression-haikuos-r1-alpha2/>