Some of the best things in the world are free. Love, happiness, and friendly advice.

But IT professionals in and out of the industry, along with technically minded students who undertake computer science degrees ? are clocked onto by others with a vice grip for future computer technical assistance.

Like a drop of blood in a million parts to a shark in the ocean, these skills are picked up a mile away by luddites and noted for that dreadful day when their computer inevitably crashes.

Well, enough is enough. [2]
