

Why I think RMS is a fanatic, and why that matters

By srlinuxx

Created 12/06/2012 - 9:55pm

Submitted by srlinuxx on Tuesday 12th of June 2012 09:55:27 PM Filed under OSS [1]

One of my commenters reports that he showed my essay on evaluating the harm from closed-source software to Richard Stallman, who became upset by it. It shouldn't be news to RMS or anyone else that I think he's a fanatic and this is a problem, but it seems that every few years I have to explain the problem again. I make the effort not because of personal animus but because fanaticism does not serve us well ? we've made huge progress since 1998 by not repeating RMS's mistakes, and I think it's important that we continue not to replicate them.

When I was say that I judge RMS is a fanatic, I mean something very specific by that. I cite Santayana's definition: "Fanaticism consists in redoubling your effort when you have forgotten your aim?". By his own account of his road-to-Damascus experience, RMS started out attempting to solve a problem; there was this broken printer driver that he couldn't fix because he couldn't get the source. RMS correctly identified source secrecy as a damaging practice leading to bad outcomes.

Unfortunately, RMS made an early decision to frame his advocacy as a moral crusade rather than a pragmatic argument about engineering practices and outcomes.

Rest here [2]

---

---

OSS

---

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/57762>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/72>

[2] <http://esr.ibiblio.org/?p=4386>