After nearly twelve years of using KDE with basically the same ole Kmix, Trevor Fischer, Fedora Ambassador and KDE hacker, has today announced that his herculean quest of rewriting Kmix has yielded some results. It's still considered pre-alpha code, but Fischer has posted the code and a screenshot!

The new mixing interface is inspired by PulseAudio mixer, but Fischer is redesigning the way it actually operates as well. In fact, he says it's working on his desktop fairly well. His design sounds like a major improvement and Kmix is way overdue.
