Look?let?s face this together. Dating can suck.

When you?re young, it?s an adventure. One has relatively little baggage, the emotional scars are few and you haven?t even begun to think about dating?s therapeutic value yet. In other words, the dating world is your oyster.

Then you find yourself at midlife, when you?ve accumulated a large pool of of crises. You know, stuff like that divorce or two under your belt, some strong political or religious beliefs that are deeply ingrained and?oh yeah?that messy conviction for hacking that?s still on your record. These are things that tend to narrow down the potential list of candidates for life-long bliss.
