Introducing the Nexus all over again.

@bobfreking

Last September Apple AAPL +0.16% caused a stir when it announced iOS 7 and the accompanying iPhone 5S would support 64-bit operation. The move to this much faster architecture gave it the jump on 32-bit rivals Android and Windows Phone and brought Apple's products in-line with desktop and laptop-class computing. But now Android has caught up and may well go speeding past.

No less than three devices lead the charge: a teaser, a leak and an official announcement. Interestingly all come from HTC and the one which will attain by far the most headlines is the new Google ?Nexus 9? tablet ? also dubbed the ?Nexus X? ? which will do battle head-on with the iPad mini .
