

Is Microsoft engaging in digital imperialism?

By Rianne Schestowitz

Created 27/08/2014 - 10:03pm

Submitted by Rianne Schestowitz on Wednesday 27th of August 2014 10:03:46 PM Filed under Microsoft [1]

Windows, the common carrier of Microsoft, is such a sordid mess that it suffers regular glitches and conducts mass surveillance on users. Microsoft knows that without Windows it cannot survive, so dirty tricks resume in a very big way. This is not a beep on the radar but somewhat of a surge.

Nothing is going to change in Munich, but Microsoft is trying to maintain an international/universal perception that the migration to GNU/Linux was a disaster. Numerous anonymous blogs were created to attack Munich over this and provocateurs of Microsoft loved citing them, only to be repeatedly proven wrong. Microsoft is trying to make an example out of Munich in all sorts of nefarious ways. We need to defend Munich from this malicious assault by the convicted monopolist and corrupt enterprise that's acting as though it fights for its very survival (while indeed laying off tens of thousands of employees).

[2]

Microsoft

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/68572>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/62>

[2] <http://www.itworld.com/open-source/433443/microsoft-engaging-digital-imperialism>